4 semesters, 120 ECTS

Degree: Master of Arts (MA)

English language competence (B2, CEFR)

The Institute of Arts and Society invites applicants for the Cross-Disciplinary Strategies (CDS) MA Degree. The English language master's degree programme offers students the opportunity to critically engage with global societal challenges. Artistic strategies and approaches to art are the shared disciplinary language of the CDS department and students learn to reflexively situate their projects in a broader societal context and to communicate them using a range of methods and formats.

Courses offered at CDS are organised into three study areas: Science and Technology, Economics and Politics, and Artistic Strategies. From across the cross-cutting curriculum, masters' students are particularly sensitised to the epistemological foundations of knowledge systems, digital technologies and their associated transformation processes, and efforts toward a socially and ecologically sustainable global future.

The master's programme is centred on trans-disciplinary projects in which students research complex relationships, make these visible, and embed them in collaborative processes. To support these projects, CDS facilitates contact and encourages collaboration between master's students and other parts of society including actors from civil organisations, academia, and politics.

The Angewandte's practice-related academic and artistic approach supports students developing their individual practices and articulating their own critical perspectives. Through excursions, workshops, lectures, team-teaching, professional introductions and close mentorship the master's programme aims to prepare graduates for an independent role in working between and within global interests with different specialist backgrounds.
